Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC)

This is one of the six principal organs of the United Nations. This Council is responsible for getting a global picture of economic, environmental and social issues facing the world. They make recommendations to countries in order to help them make informed decisions on how people around the world can best be helped to keep them from living in poverty.

ECOSOC is responsible for many funds, commissions, and agencies. Some examples are the Food and Agricultural Organization (FAO), the World Bank, and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). This Council works to participate with the rest of the world in order to create a more sustainable planet. Overall, ECOSOC works to find consensus on actions related economic, environmental and social issues around the world.

This Council has 54 Members States who are voted in by the General Assembly for 3-year terms. Every year, a new President is chosen from members of the Council.

Agenda Item 29.A – Advancement of Women

Guiding Questions

With your fellow delegates you need to find a way to work towards making the following goals a reality.

- How can girls be supported so that they have the same opportunities as male children?
- How can women be empowered so that they fill a more active role in leadership, planning and organization in their communities?
- How can countries work together to find the best ways that women can be helped out of poverty?

Background

The Charter of the UN affirms the equal rights of women. But, in many states women are not treated equally. In Saudi Arabia women cannot drive. In India, some women are harassed by their husband's families. They ask for a dowry (money) because the women have married into the family. Some of these women are murdered. Often, their deaths are called 'accidents'. In the US the average woman earns 78¢ for every 1$ a man earns. There is a lot that needs to be done.

In 1947 the UN created the Commission on the Status of Women. This group helped draft the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. They worked to include more equal language that represented women. The group spent a lot of time researching the problems women faced. They published reports so states would know where there was discrimination against women. Many states took the suggestions.

Background

By 1952 less than 100 states allowed women to vote. Members of the UN created the Convention on the Political Rights of Women to protect the political rights of women. It states all women have the right to vote. They can join government. They can get access to public services.

The Commission worked on two other Conventions to protect women. One protects women from losing their nationality after marriage. The other one states women can choose who to marry. It asks states to decide a minimum age for marriage.

The work of the Commission continued. In 1979 it drafted a new convention. It is called the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW). This Convention aims to protect all the rights of women in one document. Most countries have signed this document. Research since the 1960s shows women are at risk of poverty. The UN made the advancement of women a priority. Technology can help women at risk of poverty in rural areas. Rural women can have their lives improved if investments are made in farming. Family planning information can help women. This means women learn how to have the number of children they want. Many women keep having children because they do not know how to stop.

1995 was the Fourth World Conference on Women. It was held in Beijing. This was an important meeting because states agreed to the Beijing Declaration. This declaration said states would improve the rights of women. Every five years there is a review. The next review will take place in 2020.

In 2010 the UN created UN Women. It brought four UN organizations working to help women into one group. This organization works to help women achieve equality. They also publish statistics on women.

Recent Developments

Women are a minority group. Although there are roughly the same amount of women and men in the world women are discriminated against. In many societies women are treated unfairly by the government. There are laws against them that stop them from being treated equally to men. Also, traditional gender roles force women to do more work. For example, women on average spend 1 to 3 hours on housework more than men. This negatively impacts a women's ability to hold a job.

Women live 18 years longer in developed states than they do in developing states. This happens because women in developing countries are more likely to have cultural institutions that discriminate against women. For example, around the world 700 million women are married as children. This puts them at risk of becoming pregnant. A pregnant child is at risk of dying during childbirth. They can contract a disease from their husband. Also, more than 1.3 billion women do not have a bank account. This means they are less likely to manage finances. They have less of a voice in spending money.

Women are also at risk because they are victims of violence. However, many women do not feel comfortable seeking help. Less than 10% of women who experienced violence went to the police for help. Less than 40% looked for help at all. This shows that women do not feel the rule of law protects them and do not feel like they can get help when they are treated unfairly. Also, women and girls are victims of traffickers. This means they are forced into slavery. 70% of the victims of human trafficking are women or girls.

Rural women have an important role to play when it comes to ending poverty. 70% of women with jobs in South Asia work in farming. It is 60% in sub-Saharan Africa. These women have a role to place in food security. However, they are not usually involved in decision-making even though they might have the best knowledge. Young children in rural areas are twice as likely to not attend school which helps contribute to the cycle of poverty. As well, education for mothers is important for the health of children. Children of uneducated mothers in Latin America and the Caribbean are 3.1 times more likely to die than those whose mothers have secondary education.

Although the lives of women have improved in many developed and developing nations since the 1940s there is still a lot of work to be done.

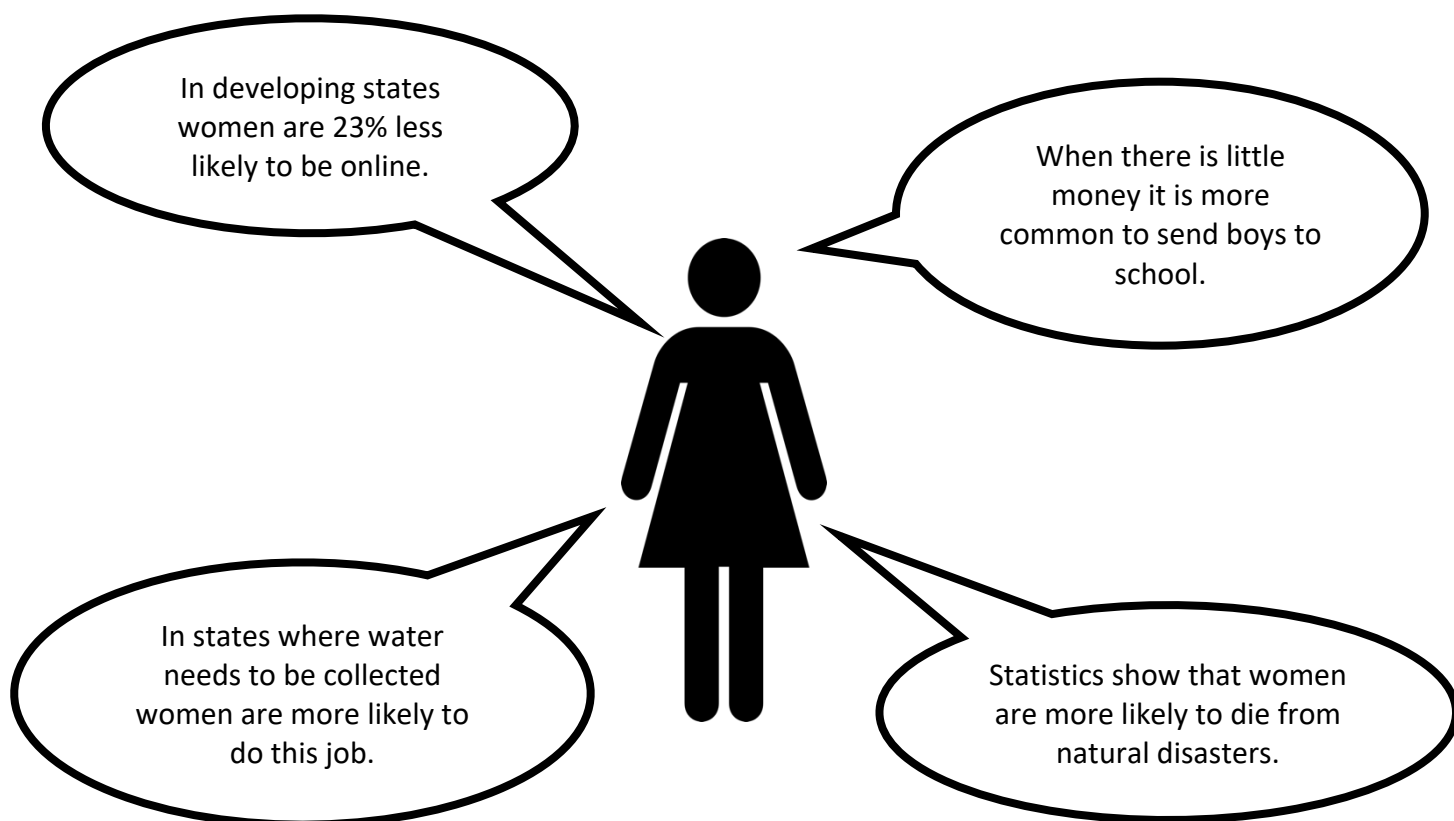

Convention on the Political Rights of Women

This convention was adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations on 31 March 1953. In 1945, women were still not treated as equal to men in most countries. This document protects the political rights of women and enshrines the rights of women to represent their government. It has 123 state parties.

Convention on the Elimination of All forms of Discrimination Against Women

This convention was adopted by the UN in 1979. It is often called a bill of rights for women. Because women are often discriminated against it is important to list the rights of women. This document also defines what is discrimination against women and asks states to work to end it. It has been ratified by 189 states

How Does Poverty Affect Women?

Guiding Questions

1. Research the women's rights movement in your country. When did women get the right to vote? To run for government? To own land?
2. Does your country protect the rights of women? What are some important issues to bring equality to women?
3. How can states work together to protect the rights of women?
4. The UN has recently passed resolutions on migrant women, violence against women and women in rural areas. All these topics help the advancement of women. Where else do women need to be protected?
5. There are links between women's inequality and poverty. Research how these two issues are connected. How can the situation be improved?
6. Violence against women is a problem. These are acts committed against women because they are women. What can states do to stop this?
7. How would education play a role in creating equality between men and women?
8. Does the problem exist in your community?
9. Who is working on it? NGOs, not for profits, other groups or individuals?
10. Knowing about this problem, how does it impact your world view?
11. How could you make an impact on this issue through your life choices?
